Not surprised to see a particular name on here. Never thought the day would come when it would be public. I never grasped the scope and of this persons transgressions and manipulations until much later. The shame one carries in youth not only paralyzes you from going public but from coming to terms with yourself over what actually happened. It's all too much to process for many young people. For me going public at the time to ANYONE wasn't never an option. That is where the failure in the leadership on every level becomes almost like a NEW violation. I would love to see when the accusations were first made and the trail of relocation and continued accusations and subsequent relocations. I'd love to know the degree and method of "treatment" many were assigned to in "treatment facilities and hospitals" (run by the church in many cases) only to be reassigned to allow the entire cycle to repeat. I guess in some respects I applaud this gesture on behalf of the Bishop and the diocese, but like most cover ups- the damage has been done- and many decades and probably centuries of ritual abuse are the result. The sad part is the paradox of an organization that's sole mission is to bring salvation to the people of the world destroyed so many along the way.

I consider myself a devote Catholic. I attend Mass every Sunday, try to keep holy the holy days, and contribute to the up keep of the Church. It depresses me to see some of these familiar names in the list. I have often wondered weather the vocation attracts this type of individual or the act of celibacy drives these individuals to these acts of sin. If the latter is true, the Vatican needs to let the Priesthood marry.
